

Wallace & Gromit Musical Wrong Trousers Day June 2008

Howell Jones solicitors Rock for Sick Children on Wrong Trousers Day

Surrey, 30th June 2008. Solicitors from the Surrey legal firm howell jones abandoned their precedents for the wild world of rock last week.

They created and wore their wackiest Trousers to support Wrong Trousers Day, which raises money for sick children through the Wallace & Gromit's Children's Foundation.

This year's theme is musical - Wrong Trousers Rock - and trainee lawyer Elsie Lyford sported a tapered piano pair of slacks inspired by the 80s, for which she won first prize.

Fellow trainee Ollie Bourne donned skimpy shorts with cut out tambourines, bagpipes and a funky double bass hanging down on bits of string. PA Jane Bishop raided her children's cupboards to make an extraordinary concoction.

This was black fatigues with a rock, red phone, parrot and harmonica all attached.

Family Team and matrimonial law expert, Samantha Jago, had stitched on jingle bells and musical notes as well as green and yellow trumpets. She sounded like Father Christmas's sleigh and said: "This is good fun and a good idea."

Altogether some 20 staff and solicitors took part, including owner partners Martyn Whiteman and Nick Richardson. Home-made cakes were also on sale and the group of souped up solicitors raised £150.00

Elsie Lyford said: "Wrong Trousers Day is a chance to be creative and raise money for a good cause at the same time. The Wallace and Gromit's Children's Foundation is excellent and doing a great job."

Ollie Bourne added: "This is great for morale in the office and creates a talking point. It's a fantastic cause and a great idea for a charity."
